Ewg diy cleaning guide. Ewg household cleaning guide.

And, for more information on healthier cleaning products, please be sure to visit our searchable guide for healthy cleaning products. EWG urges consumers to tell manufacturers and legislators they want these products labeled with a complete list of ingredients, including individual chemicals in fragrance and any impurities present. Chloroform, a suspected human carcinogen, sometimes escapes in fumes released by products containing chlorine bleach. Publishing ingredient information on the web or requiring consumers to telephone the company is not good enough. 8, 2016). Top Dishwashing Soaps and Detergents † † Note (Apr. Some “green” brands such as Earth Friendly Products do not disclose ingredients adequately. EWG’s Guide to Healthy Cleaning gives you practical solutions to protect yourself and your family from everyday exposures to potentially harmful chemicals. Quaternary ammonium compounds (“quats”) like benzalkonium chloride, found in antibacterial spray cleaners and fabric softeners, can cause asthma. And the government doesn’t review the safety of products before they’re sold. Manufacturers aren’t required to disclose all ingredients in their cleaners and many don’t, including some “green” cleaners makers. Some chemicals used in “green” product lines have not been thoroughly tested and get Cs for lack of safety data. But not all cleaners marketed as environmentally conscious score high. Consumers have a right to know ingredient labels are mandatory for food, cosmetics and drugs - but not for cleaning products. We researched ingredients and contaminants in 15 government, industry and academic toxicity databases and numerous scientific and medical journals. Donate today and join the fight to protect our environmental health. U.S. law allows manufacturers of cleaning products to use almost any ingredient they wish, including known carcinogens and substances that can harm fetal and infant development. They can disrupt the hormone system. View the guide Environmental Working Group’s mission is to use the power of information to protect human health and the environment. The scarcity of solid data about risks associated with cleaning product contents underscores the need for reform of the federal Toxic Substances Control Act of 1976, to require safety testing of chemicals on the market. However, the products profiled on this top-rated list receive EWG’s highest marks according to criteria developed by EWG’s research team, which are principally concerned with encouraging companies to embrace full transparency and avoid chemicals of potential concern. Caustic drain cleaners and oven cleaners can burn eyes and skin. Fabric softener and dryer sheet ingredients can cause allergies or asthma and can irritate the lungs. That’s why EWG developed the Guide to Healthy Cleaning, a resource that rates cleaning products on ingredient hazards, as well as disclosure. Formaldehyde, a known human carcinogen, is sometimes used as a preservative or may be released by other preservatives in cleaning products. With EWG’s help, consumers can shop smart - and also change the marketplace by pressing the cleaning industry to come up with safer formulations and to label ingredients clearly and completely. To uncover what’s in common household cleaners, EWG’s staff scientists spent 14 months reading product labels and digging through company websites and technical documents. It may form when terpenes, found in citrus and pine oil cleaners and in some essential oils used as scents, react with ozone in the air. Many leading “green” brands sell superior products, among them Green Shield Organic and Whole Foods’ Green Mission brand. “Natural” doesn’t mean non-toxic Though plant-based ingredients don’t use petrochemicals, some plant-derived substances can cause allergic reactions. Cleaning products, by their nature, may present hazards under certain conditions of use. Sodium borate, also known as borax, and boric acid are added to many products as cleaning agents, enzyme stabilizers or for other functions. Antibacterial products can spur development of drug-resistant superbugs. Read more here. In the making for more than a year, EWG’s Guide to Healthy Cleaning, the only one of its kind, has found that hazardous industrial chemicals lurk in far too many bottles and boxes under Americans’ sinks and on laundry room shelves. Just seven percent of cleaning products adequately disclosed their contents. Use a drain snake or plunger in drains. The chemical 1,4-dioxane, a suspected human carcinogen, is a common contaminant of widely-used detergent chemicals. Open windows or use fans. They used that information to create EWG’s Guide to Healthy Cleaning, which provides you with easy-to-navigate hazard ratings for a wide range of cleaners and ingredients. Try a do-it-yourself paste of baking soda and water in the oven. To fill those gaps, EWG’s staff scientists compared the ingredients listed on cleaning product labels, websites and worker safety documents with the information available in the top government, industry and academic toxicity databases and the scientific literature on health and environmental problems tied to cleaning products. About 22 percent contain chemicals reported to cause asthma to develop in otherwise healthy individuals. For simple tips to help you find better cleaning products, check out EWG’s Guide To Healthy Cleaning: Tips for Greener Cleaning. EWG recommends avoiding some products altogether because they’re unnecessary or there are no safer alternatives.
